Human Rights Assessment Tool

The purpose of this Assessment is to identify the potential human rights-related risk as the result of migrant labor activities. The Assessment questions will require you to identify:

- Low risk activities
- High risk activities

A low risk identification means that there is a low human rights-related risk with respect to that activity and further action may not be necessary or that a limited and manageable response action may mitigate or eliminate the risk.

A high risk identification, on the other hand, suggests that further inquiry or action may be needed in order to mitigate against potential human rights-related risk. In the case of a high risk identification, one or more of the following actions could be taken:

- Perform the action (or stop the current action) suggested in the assessment question.
- Obtain further information about the subject matter before determining next steps.
- Contact internal subject matter experts (SME) (e.g., Global Workplace Rights, Legal, Environmental, etc.) for further guidance on addressing the situation.
- Engage third party provider

Case Study

In 2008, a supplier of a global sports company in Malaysia was found to be exploiting migrant contract workers. Hundreds of workers were employed from Bangladesh, China, India, Indonesia, Myanmar, Nepal and Vietnam and their passports were taken upon arrival. The workers had to pay for recruitment and work permits and were housed in unacceptable living conditions. In reaction, the company took a number of steps to ensure workers were reimbursed and all fees, including airfare, would be paid by the employer. The company began working with a local NGO to improve treatment of migrant workers in all Malaysian suppliers.
Migrant Workers

Migrant labor is a prevalent phenomenon in many countries and in many ways good for migrant workers and their families, but if poorly managed can result in exploitation and the abuse of worker rights. Employees may be recruited from their home countries to host countries through a network of labor contractors and a sponsorship system against their will through human trafficking. Recruitment agencies can offer valuable service, but some of the less reputable firms can render workers vulnerable to being in bonded forced labor as they become trapped by debt incurred to pay recruiters, by visa and work permit regulations that bind them to a particular workplace, and by limited access to host country law enforcement. (See also Contract Labor human rights checklist.)

Complicity

Complicity refers to when a company knew, or should have known, that a business partner or supplier was engaged in human rights abuses and, as a consequence, it indirectly contributed to a human rights violation. The concept is relevant when dealing with labor recruiters or brokers and highlights the need to undertake human rights due diligence.

Case Study

In 2008, the National Labor Committee reported strikes at a factory in Jordan, which employed 1,400 migrant workers from South Asia. Workers reported passport withholding, physical abuse by management, unpaid overtime, no days off, threats of imprisonment and forcible deportation for speaking out. All 1,400 workers went on strike and 10 days later, the factory management conceded to worker demands. Workers were paid back wages, provided free medical care and abusive supervisors were terminated.
